

been on it for a while. Skin tags and moles disappear after a month or two. Their digestion improves. And they don't have a doggie odour – the coconut oil even takes away bad breath.” Pam suggests that the best way to give coconut oil is in small doses throughout the day, “a spoonful here or there depending on the dog's weight.” She also says that she has not yet met a dog who does not like the oil – “They usually lap it right up,” she says. “Some folks fry eggs in it and make a little extra for their dogs, or they put some in leftover oatmeal or add it to the dog's dinner, but many give it straight off the spoon.”

Pam concludes, “I can't say enough about how coconut oil helps animals. During the last eight years, I've seen over a hundred dogs improve in all kinds of ways because of coconut oil. I've even had people give it to their pet snakes and birds!”

Her fur is so shiny and glossy

Dear Niulife,

My partner and I have been extremely glad about the health of our cat since adding coconut oil to her diet. Combined with cod liver oil, the coconut has made her fur so shiny and glossy (with deep rich blacks and pure whites), that we marvel at it almost daily. Now every cat we see seems dried up and sad by comparison! She's lean, happy and athletic, too... all things that any good pet - carer should desire.

Kind regards, David

Pleasantly surprised with the results

We show and breed Bull Terriers. We have had a couple of different skin disorders. We heard about VCO and tried it. We are pleasantly pleased with the results. We are very happy to know we have this product to help with skin and coat conditions. We love it!!!

Thank you kindly, Cindy & Kevin Canada

20 rounds of prednisone/antibiotic for mange/skin - oozing/smelly/bloody mess

I began using unrefined organic virgin coconut oil for both myself and for my mother's Golden Retriever. He is about 12 years old and the poor thing has suffered during at least 20 rounds of prednisone/antibiotic for mange/skin oozing/smelly/bloody mess. Every time he has been off prednisone for a week all the symptoms come back including infected crusty ears. I have tried omega oils, tea tree oil, all kinds of skin and internal concoctions. The whole upstairs of the house smelled so bad I got ionic purifiers.

Then literally after 2 days of external and internal coconut oil (1½ teaspoons twice a day given to this dog) it's gone. All of it cleared up and it's gone. Really gone! The dog has settled down and is looking at me like, thank you, thank you, and thank you. Truth be told, I was diagnosed with Epstein Barr and have been building up my immunity with transfer factor, cell food, vitamins, minerals and this is absolutely the fresh cream with stevia on the top of the whole grain cake. I know I am equally as joy-filled for Joey the Labrador as I am for myself.

No more ticks

After reading your comments on dogs and VCO I thought I would contact you re the excellent results we are having with our dog - a black Kelpie bitch, Sasha. We live on a cattle property and as a working cattle dog Sasha was always getting lots of ticks and had to be checked and de-ticked twice daily. She has been having a heaped teaspoon of VCO and a raw egg every morning for over a year and during that time has not had any ticks or fleas. She has a beautiful black glossy coat in spite of the work she does and everyone comments on how energetic and quick she is while working. We are really thrilled to have solved the problem without having to resort to chemical treatments.

Coconut oil healed my dog's inter-digital furunculosis!

My dog (a Rhodesian Ridgeback) has had furunculosis for years. Every autumn/winter when the weather made the ground wet and muddy from rain and snow he's had really bad furunculosis and has had to eat antibiotics a couple of times each year.

It's better for a while but a week or two after medication is stopped the problem is back. I felt horrible subjecting him to constant doses of antibiotics like that.

I was reading up on virgin coconut oil to learn more about its effect on Candida. I learnt that it had a good antibacterial effect and that even animals benefited from this oil. So I started giving my dog virgin coconut oil a couple of months ago and it only took about a week before the blisters started fading and in about two weeks he was completely healed.

So far the furunculosis hasn't returned despite heavy rain and lots of mud and wet grounds. I've been giving him a large spoonful every day. He loves it. Hope this can be of help to some other dog with furunculosis out there!

Phenomenal results

"I began giving my dog extra virgin coconut oil on Monday for severe furunculosis of the paws, a four year old condition. Today is Thursday and the results are phenomenal"

Smell you later!

This most enthusiastic report is from an internet forum and describes coconut oil's deodorizing effects:

Bob in Shallotte, North Carolina, started feeding his "incredibly smelly" black Lab, Smokey Joe, the coconut oil he drains from his wok after frying eggs, sausages, and other foods. "Joe's coat shined up," says Bob,

"but the real surprise was that he stopped stinking.

He has always smelled really bad, and bathing was a waste of time. For years when I petted him, I had to hold my hands away from my clothes and go wash my hands soon and thoroughly. My wife and kids wouldn't touch him. Now I can pet him and rub him like he craves without having to run and wash up. The stench is gone and we didn't even change his bedding. I'm pretty amazed. The cure was cheap, too!" In the months since he started giving Smokey Joe his leftover coconut oil, Bob has often skipped a few days. As soon as he does, the odour comes back – and as soon as he resumes feeding coconut oil, the odor disappears.

Stop itching and scratching

Pam of Austin, Texas, is a raw foods chef who teaches healthful food preparation. "I don't have a dog of my own because I travel so much," Pam says, "but all my friends have dogs. I sell a high-quality organic raw virgin coconut oil from Mexico that has produced super results in people, and they're always asking me how to help their dogs, cats, or other animals. Coconut oil has done wonders with all of them, especially dogs." Pam also reports that dogs who receive coconut oil stop itching and scratching and their skin clears up. "Their coats really shine after they have
